

I do not think that telemarketers should have the right to make unsolicited phone calls. It is annoying and an invasion of privacy. They don't know who they are reaching -- it could be an invalid, a sick person who they wake out of a sleep, etc., etc. Why is it that victims never seem to have any rights? I think that it is great that New Jersey took such a strong stand against unsolicited telemarketers, and I do not think the Federal Government should interfere in reversing the "do not call" law.
